Degrees for 400.

Degrees are to be conferred tomorrow n 400 candidates from the four schools of the university, when the address will be delivered by Henry S. Boutell, former minister to the Netherlands.

The commencement week exercises started yesterday with the solemn high

In his sermon Father Gaynor impressed upon the graduates their duty to expose false philosophies, which, he declared, are the great and growing evil of the day. He compared them to the men in Europe now going forth to fight for their countries. He said that, even as these, the graduates have a battle ahead of them, the serious battle of life. "It is a very difficult thing," he explained, "to win victory." He illustrated with graphic word pictures of the lives and endeavors of the great Christian heroes. "You men must uphold the conquests that these pioneers have won," he said, "because the world and those who do not look heyond the material successes of this life, in the principles that actuate them, are in continual conflict against right, truth and justice. explained. Worldly Success. He summed up worldly success in this He explained this by showing that a cess attains it by any means possible without being caught and exposed by the laws of the land. Having attained financial success he seeks honors, in collegiate degrees, political preferment and in the world of art, most of which he buys. Then, as he reaches the summit of his career and looks toward the shadows of the hereafter he recalls many prostrate forms that had been class day academic program in Gaston Hall are: Class song, by J. Elliott Wright; oration, by John J. O'Day, jr.; history, by Francis A. I. Connolly; valedictory, by William J. Cullinan, and poem, by Mr. Connolly.

The burlesque parade following these literary exercises is one of the best ever organized on the "hilltop," as the several class committees have been for some weeks arranging for their participation. Fantastically garbed, the class delegations are being conducted on a pilgrimage to the old university haunts by William A. Schiobohm as marshal, assisted by Judge Michael Doyle. Some of the classes are decked in military accourtements, wearing ironic crosses and with their leaders adorned as European monarchs. The four graduating classes are under the leadership of their class presidents; College, E. J. Boyle; medical, William P. Heröst; law, B. W. Bushwaller, and dental, O. B. Moore.

Then came the quadrangle "sing," with a section of the Marine Band stationed on the porch, and the program under the general direction of George H. O'Connor, chairman of the concert committee. Many old quadrangle glees and new melodies and medleys were played and sung to the great enjoyment of a large throng of guests seated around the broad walks and verandas of the several dormitories. The chroness were led by the college glees club and volunteer alumni, with the entire attendance joining in singing from a volume of "Quadrangle Echoes" prepared for their convenience, and as a souvenir of the occasion.

Besides the college and university celebrities, other soloists were Thomas Cantwell, George H. O'Connor, G. Sanderson and Philip Scantland. The concert lasted for nearly three hours, and refreshments were served.
